SKETCHES OF LITTLE OLD NEW YORK

BY O. O. McINTYRE

Telegram Bureau: Rooms 121-122 Hotel Majestic, West Seventy-second Street.

NEW YORK LETTER.
NEW YORK, May 25.—The markets are opening in Hester street on the lower East Side. Hester street is the only remaining touch of the polyglot life of the slums. Marble apartment houses with elevators are wiping out the seething tenement bee hives.

But Hester street, where everyone has something to sell remains. Double rows of push-carts and moving curiosity shops line the curbs from one end to the other. From these carts the shopper may select furs, notions, ribbons and laces, clothing, hardware, shoes and cooking utensils. Anything the Ghetto desires is on display.

The other day, however, one of the old-time institutions was destroyed with the abolishment of the horse-cars that run on Avenue C. A new merchant is dispensing baked sweet potatoes from the oven of sheet iron stove on wheels. One push cart man sells fish, ice cream and pickles—a fine gastronomic mixture. Another is filled with raisins.

Apples dipped in candy may be purchased for one cent apiece and a man with rings of rusty keys for sale has made a living there for several years. He also carried a side line of wax candles and matches which make the great white way of Hester street.

Even the police reporters are resorting to verse libre as if the reading public did not have enough melancholy things to digest. The first rascal to perpetrate the verse libre was Charles L. Edson, who began a police story thusly:

When Mabel Godfrey's cat
Slipped down the flue
At 202 West One Hundred and Thirtieth street today
He assumed an official status.
Then there is a play at the Band-box theater that is written in free verse.

There is a real sob story sleeping in New York if the sob squad could only corner the hero. But he is too shy to be interviewed. Despite the fact that he stands out as one of New York's greatest humorists he is as lugubrious in looks as a Long Island funeral procession.

Referring, of course, to T. A. Dorgan, "Tad," the cartoonist. Very few of his admirers know that when he was a boy his right hand tried to dispute the right with an axe and that the axe won. The hand losing three digits in the fray.

"Tad" had to learn to write all over with his left hand and also it was supposed his artistic ambitions were killed permanently, but he kept right on trying to draw until he succeeded.

The age of chivalry is past. A police magistrate over in New Jersey has just forbidden a woman in search of amusement from obtaining it by horsewhipping her neighbor.

This is a cruel jab. Says a New York paragrapher: Maybe the dove of the peace party would support Hughes out of respect for his beautiful fan-tail whiskers."

At a banquet the other night at the Biltmore, Edward Henry Clift observed that he saw nothing remarkable in the fact that an Indiana bachelor's club, organized not long ago with a great flourish of trumpets and vociferous avowals of eternal celibacy, has been broken up because of depletion in the ranks due to matrimony. It is merely additional verification, he says, of the saying: "It pays to advertise."

Soap and Hot Water Make the A-B Broiler CLEAN After the STEAK COMES OUT

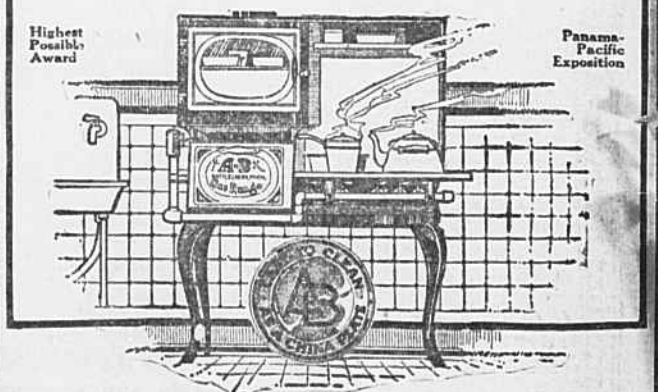

The trays are porcelain enamel, easily cleaned.

Soap and hot water will rust and corrode naked steel, but they clean the A-B enamel broiler like they clean a china plate.

The linings are aluminumized metal. Moisture and grease can't get in their deadly mussy work.

Heat from the A-B burners hits the steak on chops just right to broil evenly and thoroughly with least use of gas.

Remember—"easy to clean as a china plate" applies to the whole A-B Range—white enamel and black—all over.
